Take attendance

Facility leaders need an efficient way to quickly record attendance for events that take place in the work area, so that they can deliver and track these events as part of a larger training plan.

Rather than the coach observing the group from a distance, he/she is speaking to them directly and taking attendance.

Knowing which employees were present will allow employers insight as to how much information is being shared on the floor.

Today, let's discuss the 4 principles of proper lifting procedures.

Meeting Leader

Meeting Leader chooses a topic to speak to from a list of available topics

Meeting Leader captures attendance and each employee receives a transcript of the event

Train on the floor

Facility leaders need an efficient way to quickly create, deliver, and validate on-the-job training so instructions are standardized and measured over time.

Mobile access to content can easily translate to trainings that would normally occur on the production floor, be added to the training agenda that is currently being tracked within Alchemy.

Meeting Leader chooses a instruction to cover with one or more employees

Meeting Leader takes attendance and each employee receives a transcript of the instruction
